

Upcoming Software

Summertime is our estimated release date for three new software programs! That's right. For the first time in almost two years we're putting out new software.

Two were discussed briefly in our last newsletter, and the third being a Vet-Records program. The latter is similar to the Family Medical Records program as it'll have two parts, both a home and a corporate version (note: corporate versions may have a later release date).

Our plans are to offer these programs free of charge to home users (charging businesses only if they want customization). We will be having an optional "donate to the project" for all the programs for those users wishing to support the development. Of course if other projects are any indication, we won't receive anything for them.

While Quantum Rift Software did have a beta testing program it was ended shortly after having no response from our testers. Which makes the entire point of beta testers pointless. For this reason, any betas that we find to be stable may be found on our website for download by anyone.

A select few individuals may also be given copies of the program to test out in a production environment (i.e. doctors, vets, hotels) to do actual beta testing.

Anyone who works in any of those industries that are willing to beta-test at your workplace (with the permission of your IT department) is more than welcome to contact us, and we'll be sure you get notified of all releases.

Likewise, anyone wanting to be notified of the final release date can contact us — but rest assured we'll make notifications in our newsletter, press releases, and online.

What's with the "ankh" anyway?

No we aren't a religious affiliated corporation! Even if we may seem like a caring, religious bunch — religion isn't the reason for our policies.

An "ankh" is an Egyptian symbol, it's on many, if not most, of their hieroglyphics in tombs, and is simply, "life", "eternal life" or even "give life". And we like the way it looks.

Ankh — Life

Expansion Info Update

We currently have a general idea for how and when our expansion will be taking place. How as in how many stages. Instead of being done in a logical progression that's both cost effective and redundant to cover any potential temporary losses, it's being done in a "all or none" method.

This is the "time tested" way of doing things. Which can also be called "don't do anything new", "prove something that has never been done before can succeed", and "we'll invest once you don't need us to invest (don't call us, we'll call you)" methods.

Basically, instead of producing all the products used by the company in-house, we'll have to outsource to third parties thereby doubling to tripling our costs. Services will either have to be drastically cut back, or numerous additional costs will be incurred to modify the third party items so they'd work with the company.

Personally we believe this to be a "stupid" thing. Why pay more for things that won't work, when you could pay less and have exactly what you need? The answer? That's what investors want.

Unfortunately many business people are stuck in outdated business model thinking that's soon to go the way of the dinosaurs if it hasn't already. But until they realize it, we'll either have to conform, or have angel-investors from across the entire country just to get it up and running in one city.

We're still looking into it... We do plan on doing things in a cost-effective and logical way — just might take longer to get people to get with the real world.
